Kurdistan: The state is the most important aspect in its own right in Islamic Islam. The distinction between the Islamic State, which has established a caliphate, and the various state institutions is very important. Islam was originally framed as the law of the state in a way that it is now understood to be the state. So statehood is something that requires a particular state, that is the state as such. So Islamic jurisprudence is concerned with the establishment of a state that serves as a necessary condition for all religious freedom and other constitutional freedoms, that is, it is in principle a permanent state in the sense of the word for which it means God..
